On French Poetry

"Albert Glatigny et la tradition bohème" is the title of a paper which David Lewis has been invited to read at the 1972 annual meeting of the Association of Canadian University Teachers of French. Mr. Lewis is an Associate Professor of Modern Languages in the Department of Languages.

Albert Glatigny was one of the founders of the Parnassian group of French poets who were active in Paris between 1860 and 1870. Although he is a little-known author, his work is of considerable merit. The great symbolist, Paul Verlaine, acknowledged the extensive influence of Glatigny on his own poetic development.

The Association meets at McGill University, Montreal, May 29, 30 and 31.

To Test... Or Not To Test

According to John McDonnell, Registrar of Lakehead University, the Ontario Government is seriously considering withdrawal of financial support for the administration and maintenance for the battery of tests known as the Service for Admission to College and University (SACU).

This battery of tests indicates verbal and mathematical aptitudes and achievements of students seeking admission to university. It is widely accepted and applied across Canada. The Ontario University Council on Admissions has requested that the Council of Ontario Universities emphasize to the Ontario Government that such a test is necessary.

On Saturday, March 25, the Senate of Lakehead University voted overwhelmingly in favour of supporting retention of the test battery. Dr. W. G. Tamblyn, President of the University, and Dr. J. S. Mothersill, the University's representative on C.O.U. promised to pass on the will of Senate at the next meeting of C.O.U.

Mr. McDonnell argues that more various high school programs, coupled with the growing reluctance of principals and department heads to commit themselves on the ability and achievements of high school graduates, make it very difficult to form objective judgments regarding university admissions. He feels that without tests such as SACU provides, admission to university would be based nearly entirely on subjective criteria.

University and Community

Following is an excerpt from the report of the subcommittee of the Senate Academic Planning Committee which was charged to recommend on the present and future allocation of academic resources at Lakehead University.

How does a university serve its community? It does so in three distinct ways. First, by its very disinterestedness, out of its concern for truth and beauty, out of its concern for the culture of man, the university is a primary link between a region, its nation, and the civilization of which it is a part. (And in our own historical moment, this means, really, not only western civilization, but world civilization). Culturally, the university is integrative. It learns and transmits: it is a community of students, scholars, researchers, and artists, who study; teach; and publish, exhibit, and perform (and are in our time learning to use all the media of communication for this "transmission"). Out of its integration of knowledge and the disciplines of the mind the university develops an internal relatedness and relevance, because it is concerned with the development of persons. It integrates the region with its nation through the study of its language, history, and literature (in our nation, two languages). It integrates the region with the civilization and world beyond the nation through its various international and intercultural studies. The university transforms its region by broadening the cultural experience of the persons of the region. Because of the university, every person in the region can share according to his potential, in the cultural experience of man. Without a university, any region lives more or less in a cave.

The university also serves its region by providing the professional training and study necessary for that region in terms of its culture. If a university cannot afford full programs in every profession, it must at least provide a full preparatory program leading to terminal study at other centres.

Finally, a university serves its region by directing itself in its programs, studies, and research to the special character of its region and its resources and problems. This is probably the chief way in which a university acquires its unique "identity" (although general excellence and the imaginative way in which the university achieves all its aims also contribute to its identity). The Subcommittee feels most emphatically that the School of Forestry provides the University with its most outstanding opportunity to establish such an identity and most productively to serve the region in this respect. It recommends that the development of the School of Forestry be considered a major academic priority of Lakehead University.

In determining its academic priorities the University is compelled, however it manages its resources, to do all that the above purposes and activities imply, although it may not be able to offer full programs in everything. It must integrate, both in its curriculum and in the way in which it proceeds. It must maintain a balance of priorities among its divisions. The University must be relevant.

So if the University cannot maintain at the present time a School of Law and a School of Medicine, it can nevertheless offer courses of study leading to Law and Medicine, including at least courses through which students can anticipate the nature of advanced study in those fields.

New System

The Department of Health of the Government of Ontario has announced an award to Professor Walter Crowe of the School of Business Administration for research into "Forecasting Demand for Hospital Supplies".

This award will be of considerable assistance in funding the final stages of a computer based inventory control system which he has designed for a large Toronto hospital, and which will be test-run this year. So far as is known, it will be the first fully computerized, adaptive forecasting based hospital in North America.

Windup Bash

The Alma Mater Society of Lakehead University sponsored a windup party to express the appreciation of the student body for the efforts of faculty, technicians and administrators at the University over the school year just now drawing to a close. The party was held in the Cafeteria on Thursday, March 30 from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. Everyone in attendance enjoyed the opportunity to reminisce with friends and associates about this year's experiences (good and bad) at Lakehead University.

Parting Shots

For students: just in case you have been operating according to the principle of not allowing lectures to get in the way of your education this year, take note that you still have a chance to catch one or two before the regular session ends. The curtain comes down at 5:00 p.m., Friday, April 7.

For professors: don't be surprised to see a few new faces on the last day of classes. Just be sure to get the marks in to the Dean by Monday, May 8!

For administrators: there is no such thing as a deadline to signal the end of your worries. Next year is already crying to be scheduled to death. And yours is not to reason why!
