Legal services corporation looks for name and logo

To mark the establishment of a legal services corporation that will serve the people of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation (NAN), the interim board of directors has called for a name and logo contest.

Cultural nature

Liz Dance, a spokesperson for Nishnawbe-Aski Nation's office in Toronto, says the new name and logo should reflect the cultural nature of the corporation, says Dance.

The board is looking for an Indian name "that will (imply) what the corporation is...That is legal services," she adds.

Dance says the board is wide open to suggestions and ideas on the new name and logo that will be representative of the communities the corporation will serve.

"It's a Native organization with an all-Native board of directors. We want the name (and logo) to reflect that. We don't want to call it the Legal Services Corporation," says Dance.

"It's a big breakthrough for us," she says, adding the interim board wants NAN people to feel they have a sense of ownership in the corporation and that it is not a government agency.

Several years ago it was suggested by Native leaders that

NAN look into a better way of delivering legal services to their people because present mechanisms in the justice system were poor. The go-ahead to establish the legal services corporation was given by Ontario Attorney General Ian Scott July 4.

The corporation will eventually provide access to lawyers and establish a community legal worker program and public legal education.

The contest is open to anyone in the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation -- both professional and amateur artists -- including elementary and high school students.

The logo can be sent to the board in any size and any medium the artist is comfortable working with.

Letterhead

"The prime function of the logo is to represent the corporation on its letterhead," says Dance.

Deadline for entries is January 31.

Inquiries can be made to Liz Dance at the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation office in Toronto at (416) 920-2376. Entries can be mailed to: Interim Board of Directors, Nishnawbe-Aski Nation, 14 College Street, 6th Floor, Toronto, Ontario, M5C 1K2.

MISSING YOU
by Naomi Abotossaway

Here I sit inside my room,
I abandon all thoughts away,
Yet in my mind an image forms,
You are here and I am missing you.

Clouds outside my window stormy grey,
And but for me another lonely day,
Listening to the rhythm of my beating heart,
You are still in my mind and I am missing you.

I carry myself beyond the skies,
Stars surround me in harmony,
Fleeting comets go flying by,
And still you are near and I am missing you.

I slowly come back to my reality,
And find darkness is in rare form,
For no matter how far I try to flee,
You lie beside me and I am missing you.
