Anyone who is interested in attending the Guthrie theatre during these two performances should contact Mr. K. L. Morrison, Director of Summer Session and Extension for information on ticket prices and hotel accommodations.

SUMMER OF ART, POP CONCERTS, PLANNED FOR FREE* NORTH FESTIVAL

●In case you're wondering what that red and green and white and yellow and blue and orange thing was that passed you, here's the first clue: it belongs to the co-ordinators of the FREE NORTH FESTIVAL. Surely, you've heard of that. The Festival begins on Monday, July 6 and will include eight weeks of workshops in all types of art from painting and pottery to photography and drama.

The FREE NORTH FESTIVAL was organized by four ambitious young university students, shown in the photograph (right). They are: Charles Sharun (left); Barb Williams (centre); Clint Kushak; and Peter Lenardan (right). Included in the picture is Kathy McGovern who has been looking after some of the reams of paper work involved in organizing a program of this size.

Outdoor pop concerts and plays will also highlight the Festival.

Your second clue to the mysterious, multi-colored object is the photograph to the right.

tional material in the preparation of his book "Immigrant influence on the development of policy in Uganda Protectorate 1900-1952", which is to be published by the Clarendon Press of Oxford.

Mr. McEwan, Director of the University Computer Centre, and Mr. Watson, Assistant Director, Academic Services, were recently invited to participate in a conference on System Applications, Implementations and Extensions of A.P.L., the relatively new computer language whose use is fast expanding in universities, business and engineering, at Goddard Space Flight Centre, Maryland. Mr. Watson presented their joint paper on suggested changes to improve the consistency of the language.

FACULTY OF SCIENCE TO OFFER COURSE FOR ARTS STUDENTS

●A new physics course designed specifically for non-science students will be offered at Lakehead University this fall.

The course is entitled "Contemporary Physical Thought" and it will be available as an option to Arts students in any year without prerequisites.

Dr. Hastings, one of the innovators of the new course, commented on the reasons for developing a physics course of this type: "Students today place more emphasis on social thought than ever before. They believe it relevant to study about man and his role in society and they tend to shy away from science which they consider too technical and rigid. Our modern problems, such as pollution and increasing technocracy, have a more direct influence on society now than ever before," he said. "To understand and cope with these modern living conditions, students should be exposed to some scientific fact and thought. A sociology major, for example, would be better equipped to understand the reasons for the varying degrees of success of the world's many cultures if he studied the scientific influence on them."

When asked why the course was being introduced now, Dr. Hastings responded: "The recent decreases in science enrolments have prompted many of us to re-examine our role within the university. This new course is a direct result of such a re-examination. Its purpose is to present physics in a manner which is not highly technical or mathematical but which brings out the essential beauty and ideas of the subject. It has not been designed to train scientists, but to give non-scientists an idea of what the physicist is up to these days."

The course will be primarily concerned with recent ideas and discoveries in Physics.

Chairman of the Physics Department, Dr. V. V. Paranjape commented, "Science programs of this type are now being offered at several Canadian Universities and are proving to be extremely popular with the Arts students."

"The Department of Physics has shown commendable appreciation of the scholastic need for a liberalized approach to the sciences by introducing this course", added Dean of Science Dr. R. A. Ross.

If enough interest is shown in "Contemporary Physical Thought" it will be offered as an evening course available without prerequisite to any adult student.

"The Faculty of Science is currently considering in committee, the establishment of a Liberal Science program at Lakehead University next year", commented Dr. Ross. "In many ways this Physics course is a forerunner for that program and for any other possible new venture in community science programs from which a degree program in Pollution and Environmental Science may also emerge".
