Year Round University

A recent statement by External Affairs Minister, Mitchell Sharp regarding the year-round use of Universities to relieve student unemployment, created much comment from Universities across Canada. Universities presently on the semester system include the University of Guelph and Simon Fraser University, and both these institutions referred to the increase of costs under such a program. At Waterloo University, the semester system is used for engineering, scientific and architectural courses where students work in jobs located by the University and that are related to their program. It was pointed out by that University that such a system could not be incorporated into the Arts program, as jobs are too difficult to find and classify.

In speaking to this matter, Dr. W. G. Tamblyn, President of Lakehead University, pointed out that the all too prevalent concept that a University is in operation just seven months of the year is both outdated and incorrect. "The days when the University needed only to offer a winter term are long past," he said. The winter term at Lakehead will end on May 1st on the last day of final examinations, and on May 10th, the Spring Term courses will begin with an expected enrolment of 300 to 400 students. Credit courses will be offered in Anthropology, Biology, English, French, Political Science, Psychology and Sociology.

The spring term ends on June 25th and summer term begins on July 5th, running until August 15th. Over one thousand students are expected to register in the Summer Courses in addition to which a further 300 to 400 registrations are expected for the Secondary School Teacher's Program which will run concurrently.

The University is also a centre for seminars and conferences, many of which take place during the summer. This summer Lakehead University will host Dialogue '71, for Secondary School representatives, University delegates and other individuals concerned with the transition of students from secondary to post-secondary education processes. In June the National Extension Director's Conference will meet on the campus bringing together Directors of Extension Departments from post-secondary education centres across Canada. Considering these factors, it is difficult to understand those who criticize the University community for non-use of its facilities during the spring and summer months.

The argument that the semester system would control the release of students in the job market has not shown to be realistic in studies conducted, as the heaviest enrolment in that system still comes in the winter months with a relatively low enrolment during the summer months. Considering the increase in the cost of providing such a system, it would seem that the implementation of the tri-semester system would prove to be ineffective and would increase the costs.

The Exhibition is a selection of the finest Canadian prints produced by several of the most well known printmakers in this country and the result is a colorful, diversified exhibition, revealing a sensitive understanding of a particular graphic medium.
